McMillan Makes It Clear

Clarksville - Kim McMillan makes it clear, she's running for governor. "These are tough times but I believe in the future of Tennessee because I believe in the people of Tennessee," said McMillan, Tennessee's first female House Majority Leader and former member of Governor Bredesen's cabinet.

"For almost a year I've been listening to the needs of our neighbors and families and loss is on everybody's mind— loss of jobs, loss of homes, loss of health insurance, loss of retirement security. I know that tough times call for leadership that lifts us up and brings us together," she added.

"I'm running for governor because I believe I can bring Tennessee together, and I know that together we can do more than just make it through – we can make it better."

McMillan filed papers to establish an exploratory committee for the 2010 governor's campaign last spring. "The people of Clarksville and Montgomery County have been good to me and that's why I met with my hometown paper to make my intentions clear. I want to make sure they know that I'm in this race and I'm in it all the way."
